5th May (day of the Emperor’s death).

Until half past ten eleven, generally calm; soft breathing; perfect immobility of the whole body; only a few movements in the sloe; but rare; eyes fixed, veiled, closed up to three quarters. From half an hour to half an hour, a few sighs or sounds. A second tear in the same place; the right hand on the bed cover; the left hand under the buttocks. Since six o’clock in the morning, very calm, motionless.

Sixteen people were present, including twelve French people, Mrs Bertrand, with two women, Ali, Noverraz, Napoleon Bertrand, at seven o’clock; at half past seven he was ill.

From eleven o’clock to noon, Arnott placed two sinapisms on his feet, and Antonmarchi placed two vesicles, one on his chest, the crown; the Emperor sighed a few times. Several times the doctor went to the cervix to check the pulse.

At half past two Dr. Arnott had a bottle of boiling water placed on his feet, and Antommarchi placed two vesicles, one on his chest, the right hand on the bed cover; the left hand under the buttocks.

From six o’clock in the morning, very calm, motionless.

On 25th April 1821, the Emperor dictated a letter to General de Montholon. It was to be given to the governor immediately after his death: “Your Excellency, The Emperor Napoleon died this day _______ after a long and painful illness. I have the honour to announce it to you. He has authorised me to communicate to you, if you desire it, his last will. I beg of you to let me know what are the directions prescribed by your Government for the conveyance of his body to Europe, as well as those relative to the persons of his suite. When the day came, Montholon had only to specify the date and time in his letter: “May 5th one thousand eight hundred and twenty one at ten minutes to six”.
